

Oksana Carlson, Ed.D., MBA

Assistant Dean, Global Collaborations
The Johns Hopkins Carey Business School

Dr. Oksana Carlson has joined the Johns Hopkins Carey Business School in 2009 to develop and launch the innovative Global MBA program. As her role expanded, she provided leadership and oversight to Master of Science programs, Executive MBA, and international initiatives of the Carey Business School. In 2014, she relocated to Beijing, China, to lead the school's collaboration with the universities in Asia, building the employer network and identifying new academic and business opportunities in Asia.

Dr. Carlson is often invited as a guest speaker and a visiting lecturer by many universities in China: Beijing Technology and Business University, Chongqing Business and Technology University, Fuzhou University, Guangdong University of Finance and Economics, and others. She was also invited to deliver lectures on higher education in the U.S. and strategies for applicants to U.S. business schools, at EducationUSA offices in Beijing and Shanghai.

Prior to joining the Johns Hopkins Carey Business School, Dr. Carlson managed the international programs at The George Washington University. Her professional experience includes international project development and project management at Johns Hopkins Medicine International; the Hyundai Business Center, and extensive work in business development with both nonprofit and for-profit organizations.

She received a Doctor of Education degree with focus on International Education from the University of Minnesota, an MBA in International Business from the George Washington University (Washington, DC), and Master of Arts in Marketing and Journalism from the Far Eastern State University (Russia). In addition, she completed professional management training programs in Italy and Japan, organized by the Russian Ministry of Foreign Affairs.
